Walking the Rim. March 21, 2014. More fun at the big ditch. We shuttled around the east side of the park out to Yaki Point and then back to Pike Creek Vista where we got off the bus and walked back to Kaibab trail head. There are two trails down into the canyon, Kaibab in the east and Bright Angel in the west.

Indian Garden to the South Rim (5 miles): 2.75 hours; We also spent 30 minutes at Phantom Ranch and 30 minutes at Indian Garden, for a grand total of almost 11 hours. Our favorite section was at the very beginning of the hike. Walking down the North Kaibab Trail in the cool morning hours, along the crazy trail on the cliffs was so much fun.

Walk the Grand Canyon's South Rim. Take in the beauty of the Grand Canyon at your own pace by walking the trail along the canyon rim. Some portions of it are paved, others are not. Some sections of the trail are part of a paved greenway, which is great if you want to bike as well. One section of the trail, beginning at Yavapai Point, is designated the Trail of Time and features markers and exhibits designed to give you a sense of perspective about the canyon's formation, geology and history.

The easiest is the Rim Trail, a relatively flat walk that meanders along the rim taking in many different lookouts. However, the truly special ones are those that go below the rim which can be tackled with a stay at the bottom of the canyon (either at Phantom Ranch or camping - both require advanced reservation) or in part on a day hike.

GRAND CANYON ENCYCLOPEDIA: Rim to Rim Enlightenment is a well-researched, factual, and comprehensive reference book written in the guise of an educational tour de force. Providing all the relevant subject matter of the Grand Canyon, readers peruse subject matter according to what holds their interest. Thus, one might choose to read all the information from cover-to-cover while another reader selects key subject matter that holds interest. Here's a sample of this text's vast menu offering (selective topics): geology, natural history (flora and fauna), human history, the Colorado Plateau Province (arguably, the Grand Canyon is indeed the crowning jewel), the Colorado River (which is the architect that initiated this chasm by which all else has followed over millions of year), the John Wesley Powell saga (whose heroic expeditions, by boats in the 19th-century were the first to explore the interior of the canyon), hiking trails (descriptions thereof), Phantom Ranch (the tourist mecca at the bottom of the canyon), recommended places to see along the rims, hotels, restaurants, among other miscellaneous and useful information. More importantly, salient aspects of geology and the canyon's so-called Creation Story is based on sound interpretation. In other words, a style of learning that provides all the relevant facts presented in an easy-to-read and comprehend primer. Given this specific modality of a higher standard of edification, here is what the National Park Service says about this facet of learning: "Interpretation is driven by a philosophy that charges interpreters to help audiences care about park resources. Interpretation establishes the value of preserving park resources by helping people discover the meanings and significance associated with those resources. This competency requires interpreters at all levels to understand the core definition of interpretation, the professional standards for interpretation, the purpose of interpretation, how interpretation can be measured, and how successful interpretation works. These understandings continually evolve and increase in sophistication throughout an interpreter's career." This declaration is precisely what this encyclopedia text shares with readers. That said, there is a legion of books written about the Grand Canyon. This Grand Canyon treatise that I wrote and published is another effort, but with a difference. Namely, an anthology based on all the essentials of the Grand Canyon's numerous facets. William Cathcart-Rake shares his memories of a half-century of hiking in the Grand Canyon. During that time he spent sixty days and walked five hundred miles below the rim. As he recounts his thoughts and experiences of eighteen separate treks below the rim, he includes many fascinating facts about the Canyons natural and human history. As the years go by, the author discovers that the Canyon has more to offer than just being a challenging place to hike it becomes a sanctuary for reflection and renewal. His time in the canyon is more than days below the rim, miles walked, switchbacks negotiated, stream crossings, walking speed, and pounds carried. Conquering the canyon an impossible and foolish quest ceased to be a goal. He returned to the canyon because of the effect it had on him, not because of what he could do in it or to it. The canyon allowed him to discover his ability to persevere despite discomfort, afforded an opportunity to learn more about the natural world we live in, and gave him a deeper appreciation of the need to seek the solace afforded by sauntering below the rim.

The book is to be used as an inspiration to start living a lifestyle connected to nature's rhythm and it can be used as a workbook where the reader follows the season by carrying out activities, journeys and ceremonies.

Many backpackers dream of taking epic, once in a lifetime thru-hikes that take months and cover thousands of miles. The author is not one of those people. For Jim Rahtz, the best thru-hikes are those that are still epic, but take only weeks, rather than months to complete. The Tahoe Rim Trail (TRT) is one of those trails. At 170 miles, the distance is less intimidating than many, but the experience is still amazing. This is a dream trip for anyone that wants to immerse themselves in a possibly life changing adventure, but doesn't want to give up the life they have to do it. Make no mistake, this trail is not an easy hike. It weaves through the Sierra Nevada after all. However, the scenery is amazing, thru-hike logistics are simpler than most and navigation is straight forward. Come along and discover all the specific challenges and rewards of a thru-hike around the TRT. Be warned, however. Once you've finished this short book, your bucket list may have gotten a little longer.

The next step in the journey brought us to a sturdy Park Service bus waiting nearby. According to guidebooks, this bus would carry us to the top of the South Kaibab Trail. Amy and I climbed up the steps and down the narrow aisle lugging our backpacks loaded with sleeping mats, clothes and food. The water, a gallon for each of us, gurgled reassuringly in plastic bottles. We sat down near the back of the bus. After waiting for late arrivals, the bus driver closed the squeaky door, started the bus, glanced at the rear-view mirror and shifted the gears. The driver, a frumpy, middle-aged woman with hints of gray in her hair, started her route with a slight lurch of the bus. Even at this early hour, several people got on and off at various trailheads and scenic overlooks that lined the rim of the Canyon. The driver seemed relaxed and friendly. I felt a mixture of rising anticipation and panic sweep over me as we moved from the known into the unknown. One part of me felt giddy with exhilaration as we neared the trailhead. Another cautious part inside wanted answers and a reassurance I could not supply. This voice began with the usual question, Now what did we forget to pack? Other questions nagged at me beneath the surface. What am I doing? Am I getting in way over my head? I felt embarrassed and reluctant to share my reservations with Amy at this early stage of our journey. Amy silently gazed out the window as the bus bumped along. Several other people on board spoke quietly, but with eager, nervous voices. One younger couple sat quietly, staring out at the passing trees, clear sky and a few scattered park buildings. Time seemed to shift during that ride to the top of the South Kaibab trail. Even through the windows, the views from the top of the Canyon were magical. The elevation on the South Rim of the Canyon reached over 7,000 feet. At certain points, we saw visitors walking along the edge to admire the scenery. I had visited the Canyon just once during a winter vacation to Arizona with my ex-wife just a few years before. Unfortunately, the trail was icy at the time and we cautiously hiked down only a short distance before turning back. Like most awestruck tourist, I spent the previous visit walking along the rim, snapping too many pictures and admiring the views from the top of the Canyon. As we gazed out the window of the bus, I could catch glimpses of the same views that enchanted me years before. I recalled that at certain points along the rim you could catch a glimpse of the Colorado River almost a mile below, although the folds and contours of the Canyon walls usually hide it. During the ride, all of our plans for hiking down into the Canyon took on a new reality. I finally realized in the pit of my stomach that we were really going on this trek and that we were going to be descending an entire mile in elevation carrying a heavy backpack every step of the way. To calm my inner turmoil, I reviewed once again why we had chosen the South Kaibab Trail to reach the Colorado River. For one thing, it offered a rich history. The South Kaibab consisted of a six-mile hike down a steep track first used by natives who, legend has it, followed a game path into the Canyon. Later, in the nineteenth century, miners searching for gold and silver widened and developed the trail. By the beginning of the twentieth century, most of the mines proved unprofitable and the miners abandoned them. However, the trails the miners developed became popular with the growing number of tourists drawn to the Canyon. During the 1930s, the park service started improving and maintaining a number of these trails into the Canyon, including the South Kaibab Trail. The South Kaibab quickly gained a reputation for its beauty. Many hikers selected this route because, unlike other popular routes, it often followed ridgelines and offered a number of unobstructed views of the Canyon. However, the trail with many walks along the central California coast, not to forget mom's first backpacking trip at age sixty-six. The grand finale is mom's own story of when she hiked the Grand Canyon rim-to-rim (down the north rim and up the south rim) at age seventy-nine. Taking the reader along on our hikes, I can illustrate mom's long journey from being meek and beat down emotionally by her first two husbands and then finally finding herself and her strength by tackling these goals she previously felt unsure about doing. In the end, mom is an admirable phoenix rising from the ashes of bad marriages and abuse. Her accomplishments bring tears to my eyes, especially her own story of hiking the Grand Canyon at age seventy-nine.
